Saurashtra & Kutch region right from the beginning of the month gambling becomes the major activity in many households. As Janmashtami gets closer almost every house is converted into a gambling den here. Even major cities — Ahmedabad, Surat, Vadodara and Rajkot are no exceptions. The only difference is scale of gambling. In bigger cities, stakes are much higher.

"When it comes to Janmashtami people don't care about anything in Saurashtra. In many Government offices, employees have already gone on leave for whole week up to Sunday. Even industrial units are closing down here as workers are in different mood. Schools and colleges in the region are observing defacto vacations as classes are almost empty. Plethora of fairs in the region add more fervour to the festivities," says Kishorsinh Jadeja, a resident of Rajkot.

"It may be a crime as per laws but gambling during Janmashtami is widely accepted socially in Gujarat. It is a known fact that boozing is social taboo here. But over the past few years boozing has been added in the celebrations of all the festivals [illegible] Diwali, Uttarayan or others," says Mohanbhai Kalaria, a septuagenarian social worker. According to Kalaria, religious practice of offering prayer at Lord Krishna's temple, procession and attendance in midnight Maha Aarti too are followed but without gambling Janmashtami is never complete in Saurashtra and parts of Gujarat.

Police on its part became extra active to curb these illegal activities and lodged cases, says an IG rank official adding, "Maximum number of cases pertaining to gambling are registered during Janmashtami festival in the State. Gambling is widespread in the State and it is an age old tradition. Sometimes police remain liberal as long as peace is maintained."
